Midlife Manifesto

Kelly Swan “retired” at age 49 to help the homeless and needy full-time. He has 25 years of experience in the corporate world, 20 years of experience leading a 501c3 nonprofit he founded, is a licensed minister and has counseled organizations and executives on messaging, media relations and reputation management.

Career Highlights

He was the spokesman for two Fortune 500 companies, served as a ghost writer and adviser to six CEOs, trained 1,000 people in crisis communications, managed PR for billion-dollar deals, received 11 awards for news writing, feature stories and branding, and worked on a 2017 Super Bowl ad.

Personal Life

Married almost 30 years, father of five and has a degree in organizational communication from The University of Tulsa. He is recognized as a lay leader at the church he attends, teaches children and adults at church, has visited every Major League Baseball stadium and once helped unearth a dinosaur skeleton.

Helping The Homeless

In 2003, Kelly befriended a homeless man on a downtown street. The encounter changed the course of his life and prompted him to form Filling The Void – a nonprofit ministry that has fed more than 300,000 people. The organization has received two national awards for community service.
